

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

REVIEWS.

Zeitschrift für Socialwissenschaft.

GEORG REIMER, Berlin, has issued the first number of this journal, which is to appear monthly, under the editorial direction of Dr. Julius Wolf, formerly of Zürich, now professor of the social sciences at Breslau, author of System der Sozialpolitik.

The new journal is "not for investigators alone, but for citizens, members of parliament, and administrators and their officials, merchants, employers, and laborers." "The occupations of all these make attention to social questions necessary." It proposes to be "scientific," but not "technical." It will "cultivate the whole field of the social sciences. The heaviest burden will fall on national economy, but this is not the only science which must furnish building material for the structure of social science. More and more are other sciences professing to work upon problems of a social nature, and to make the results tributary to social solutions. The Zeitschrift accordingly has two objects: first, to be a bridge between social science and the public; second, to be a point of union between the exponents of natural science and the exponents of economic and other political sciences, in so far as both concern themselves with social affairs. National economy, social philosophy, and social ethics, also social history and social jurisprudence, ought to direct their pursuits toward synthetic results. Not in treatment of problems strictly within their own limits, but in dealing with so-called social problems, these sciences will have a place in the Zeitschrift in company with the evolutionary theory, anthropology, mass and individual psychology, medicine and hygiene."

While not neglecting more general considerations, the Zeitschrift für Socialwissenschaft will pay particular attention to aspects of social problems that are of special interest to Germany, Austria, and Switzerland. We welcome the new journal, and hope it will be able to realize its ideals.

ALBION W. SMALL.